I have some limited experience with this particular software, but the main thing I can tell you is that the best way to get your serial number is to use the program's built-in diagnostics tool. Run the diagnostics tool, right-click the reported error, and click "Fix". This should restart the tool, giving you a new serial number. There are two things to note here: Make sure you're not using the software for anything other than what it's intended for. I.E. For any non-business needs (recording/mixing/etc.) please don't! If the tool is not reporting a new serial number, consider calling the company that made your software to tell them about the problem. Maybe your serial number is past the expiration date for support. We had some issues, and we were able to get the company's ticket system to recognize that the serial number had changed by simply updating the registry entry, but we had problems after the serial number had already expired and the ticket system couldn't recognize that we were talking about a new serial. In summary, you have two options: Run the diagnostics tool Call the company and report the problem Other than that, you're pretty much out of luck. I've looked at the error log, and I don't see any useful information in it. And there really isn't anything else I can suggest. /** * -*- c++ -*- * \file nth_element_map_common.hpp * \author Krystian Marek, Alexander Rothfuss, Gunther Holler * * \brief Map-based nth element of a map. * * Copyright (c) 2009, Gunther Holler, Alexandre Brugnoni ** Distributed under the Boost Software License, Version 1.0. * (See accompanying file LICENSE f678ea9f9e
